Around the Police Station

Chief of Detectives Joe Leal had a strenuous time of it while he was on the fair Isle of Maui, for, besides clashing with the black gemman Mr.
Emory Harris, he came within an ace of having to mix it with Captain Willett, master of the Fooing Suey. Joe slipped across the island the day he arrived there, and, deeming it better to make a night raid on the boat, when he was sure his man would be sleeping the sleep of the just, he waited until about 3 o'clock in the morning.
Then he rowed out to the deep-water bark and boarded her.

In the meantime, nothing had been said to Captain Willett regarding the jail-breaker's presence on board, and he was in deepest ignorance with respect to the whole matter. So, when Joe aroused the fore-castle in his scrap with Harris, Captain Willett was also awakened and did a double-quick from the forward sleeping quarters. He arrived just as Leal slipped the irons on Harris.

"Who are you?" he yelled at Leal, when he saw that the rumpus had been aroused by a strange man.

"I came after this man," answered Joe, pointing to Harris, who was panting from his exertions.

"I'd like to know what right you've got on this ship," flashed back the captain, and he started to do a little mixing of his own, according to the story brought over here. Leal then showed his badge of office, at the same time telling the captain that he was the Chief of Detectives of Honolulu, and that Harris was an escaped convict. Captain Willett then, it is said, was eager to knock daylight out of Harris, but was prevented by Joe.
Everything was fixed up all right, and the chief left the ship with his man in irons.

Captain Willett knew absolutely nothing about the man's being on board. Harris did not sign on the crew, and it is stated that he had assistance from one of the mates in stowing away on the vessel. Harris had a little money, supplied, it is presented, by his wife, and he must have used this as a bribe to get on the ship.
He had about five dollars when he was brought back here.

Leal did not have any trouble with him on the return trip, but, if the grand surprise had not been worked on him in good shape when the arrest was made, it is probable that a serious cutting affair would have ensued, as Harris had a genuine "ol' nigger" razor in his possession. This was found on the floor after the scuffle, and Harris admitted that it belonged to him. When the fight in the forecastle first started, Harris had the advantage, for his eyes were accustomed to the semidarkness of the room. He leaped on Joe, and had him down for a moment. A young Hawaiian named Archer, who is making the voyage around the Horn on the Fooing Suey, fortunately recognized Leal and gave him aid.

Harris stated that he had been in hiding out at the polo field at Moanaluna for some time. It seems that he was not at Lelehu during the whole period of his freedom. He said last night that, when he heard Leal had been made chief of detectives, he knew he had no chance, and intended to give himself up last Sunday. Before coming to town, however, he learned that the Fooing Suey was about to sail for the Atlantic Coast, and he accordingly made his plans to stow away in her.

Yesterday morning in police court Harris asked to have his case put over until today, and the request was granted. It may be that he will be sent out of the country. He very candidly announced yesterday that if he ever gets another such easy chance to walk out of durance vile he will certainly avail himself of the opportunity.

Lopez to Hilo.

Lopez, another man who has made considerable of a reputation for himself as a jail-breaker, left for Hilo the other day. That is the place where he first came into the public eye as a criminal. He will undoubtedly be given a very cordial reception in the metropolis of the Big Island.

The barkentine Fullerton sailed on April 7 from Port San Luis for this port.

MARINE

The W. G. Hall sailed last night for Kauai at 5 o'clock.

The steamer Maui sails today at noon for Paauhau and Ookala.

The Claudine sails this evening at 5 o'clock on her regular run to Maui.

The Mauna Loa sails at noon today for Kona and Kau ports, carrying a fair list of passengers.

The Inter-Island steamer Nocuau arrived here from Kauai yesterday morning with a fair cargo. She sailed again on the return trip last night for sugar.

Word has just arrived here that the Marion E. Chilcott sailed from Gavi-ota for this port on April 1. She is a fast boat and should make a good passage to Honolulu.

The Alameda, which will probably arrive before the China, left a day later than that boat and consequently has but little mail. She has twelve hundred tons of cargo and fifty-seven cabin passengers for here. The China will have six days' mail.

Captain Sam Hipsa has retired from command of the little island schooner Ka Mo'i, under charter to the Kona Development Company. His place will be taken by Captain Jack Dick, who has been second mate on the Iwalani up until a short time ago.

The Claudine arrived here early yesterday morning from Maui, bringing passengers and freight. Considerable rough weather was met by the Claudine on the coast of Hawaii, the boat not being able to make a landing at Laupahoehoe. The mail from this place was taken to Hilo.
